If a child becomes very ill with Covid, what are the plans for getting that student back on track with education once they are ready to resume school?	7/15/2020
There are 5th graders from our school (my son is one of them) that are accelerated in math. They were supposed to go to Julian for middle school math. But I haven't heard anything about if that is still happening, or what their placement would be. What is the plan for these kids?	7/15/2020
Have they considered assuring kids in same household attend in school on same days of the week? If one person in household has covid, you would isolate potential spread to smaller group if they attend same days, as opposed to potentially passing to both groups. Also would help with safety and childcare for children and parents as kids stay home and walk to and from school.	7/15/2020
Will all remote learning days be asynchronous?	7/15/2020

What is the status of our Superintendent? Is she sticking around? Is she committed to fulfilling her contract, and making the necessary changes for a successful year?	7/15/2020
For the middle school: The biggest issue has always been that different teachers require different technologies and post their assignments in different places. This is impossible for kids with executive functioning issues (and their parents). I know every child is unique and requires different needs. For us, my son is pretty adept on the computer. I think having a routine schedule, on-line contact with other students and maybe a brief check-in with a resource teacher would keep him on track. I think speech and social work could also be done via face chat.	7/15/2020

Could parents opt to have their kids go full-remote if the hybrid is the final plan?	7/15/2020
I'm curious about the personnel math. How many teachers do we need to do the hybrid approach if it includes full, synchronous remote learning? Would it be more efficient, safer, and cost-effective to invest in full, synchronous remote learning only	7/15/2020
If we go full-on remote learning, can the district give advice on how best to possibly set up small pods of students so they can perhaps engage in some learning together?	7/15/2020

For those who choose a 100% remote option, will there be teachers dedicated to these 100% remote classes or will they be managed by teachers who are engaged in teaching the hybrid model?	7/15/2020

When will they let parents know what days their kids will be in school? Having my kids at home 3 days a week will require a great deal of planning. Based on Dr. Kelley's answers at the board meeting last night, it did not appear that there was any urgency to this.	7/15/2020
Will ipads from 5th grade be traded for chrome books?	7/15/2020
Can a 504/IEP student opt for 2-day rather than 4-day instruction? How do we know if that in the student's best interest?	7/15/2020
When do we need to decide on full remote vs hybrid option?	7/15/2020

What is the plan when positive tests start happening within the school? 7/15/2020 18:49:01

Are all the 504 and IEP kids together? 7/15/2020 19:57:22

If my child has a 504 and I don't want him to do all 4 days in person, do I have the option of just the 2 day in person? How do I communicate that? What if I decide I want him 100% remote? How do I communicate that? With a new 6th grade AP, I don't know to whom to speak to. 7/15/2020 20:46:15
