Practical Ways to Still Use It

Instead of selling it, you can get better practical value out of the device by dedicating it to a single, lightweight task:

- Dedicated E-Reader: Download the Kindle or Kobo app to turn it into a lightweight digital book reader.
- Smart Home Controller: Mount it to a wall or leave it on a stand to act as a permanent dashboard for Google Home, Alexa, or smart light switches.
- Digital Photo Frame: Turn on a slideshow loop of family photos using Google Photos while it sits on a desk or counter.
- Dedicated Media Remote: Keep it on your coffee table purely to cast video or control music playback on your smart TV or home speakers.

Google Jamboard stands

The original Google Jamboard rolling stand had a high initial retail price of $1,349. However, since Google officially shut down the Jamboard cloud service and sunsetted the hardware, the resale value of the dedicated rolling stand has dropped significantly, typically fetching between $40 to $200 on secondary or surplus markets depending on local demand. [1, 2, 3, 4]

Market Value Factors

- Original Cost: $1,349 MSRP when purchased new as an accessory from Google or authorized resellers.
- Current Resale Value: Roughly $40–$200 for used units on liquidation sites, government surplus auctions, or peer-to-peer marketplaces.
- Hardware Context: Because the Jamboard screen itself is largely obsolete for its intended cloud collaboration purpose, buyers generally value the heavy-duty rolling caster base only for generic VESA-compatible large display mounting or DIY workshop use. [1, 2]

If you are looking to buy or sell a Jamboard stand, let me know if you need help finding local marketplace pricing or figuring out VESA compatibility for other screens.
