Denton ISD Students Explore Career Pathways During Manufacturing Day at LaGrone Academy

Denton ISD students took a step toward their futures during Manufacturing Day on October 3 at LaGrone Academy. The event, hosted in partnership with the Denton Economic Development Partnership, connected students with leading employers to explore career pathways in advanced manufacturing and related industries.

Throughout the day, more than 150 middle school students and hundreds of high school students engaged with representatives from companies including Peterbilt, Safran, Tetra Pak, US Aviation, and Target. Students experienced hands-on demonstrations, explored cutting-edge equipment, and learned how classroom principles of applied engineering are used in real-world settings across multiple industries.

Manufacturing Day exemplifies Denton ISD's commitment to preparing students for future success through strong community and business partnerships. By linking Career and Technology Education with authentic, career-connected experiences, events like this provide students with meaningful opportunities to discover their interests and develop skills for life after graduation.

This recognition highlights the outstanding work of Denton ISD's Career and Technology Education team and Jamie Adams, Director of Strategic Partnerships for the Denton Economic Development Partnership, whose collaboration made the event possible. Their shared efforts continue to connect education with workforce development, helping students turn their learning into future opportunities.
