Coaching Philosophy

My professional ideology is simple and basic. I believe athletes should present themselves with pride and confidence. I believe each student represents the lord, themselves, their parents, and their educational institution.

Competitive athletics helps to mold a beneficial attitude that guides students throughout the rest of their lives. The life lessons taught in and through athletics give students the personal tools that help prepare them for the real competitions of their adult lives. Practice, diligent hard work, and a willingness to attempt any feat in the face of some type of adversity, strengthen skills students will need to become successful.

I believe that self-confidence is the one most important ability we as coaches, teachers, and mentors can help students develop. The will to try is the first step towards success in any endeavor.

The school system and the community directly benefit from an athletic program that is administered with a pride and a conviction to have things done in the proper way. Both bodies are more willing to support an athletic program that has distinguished itself by always comporting itself in a manner that brings honor to itself and everything involved with or affected by it.

Community and student body support are as vitally important to a program as are the students that participate in the events. Self confidence is easier to achieve when you feel supported. This support not only comes with successes on the field or court, but also from the successes achieved later in life by the participants that are touched by this program.

I personally believe that through athletics I can help ready athletes and students for the struggles that lie ahead of them. I thrive on instilling self-discipline and self-confidence in young people. I try to instill this axiom into every student's life I touch, "Go forward and do the task ahead of you to the best of your ability, do it the right way the first time, and no one should be able to criticize your performance."

There is only one way to do things, the right way.
