5 POINTS TO ADDRESS WITH STUDENTS FOLLOWING A DRILL:

An Action Guide is the training tool for teachers to teach students about our safety procedures. What follows are 5 points to consider during the training and if students experience fear from our drill practice. Practicing safety is a spirit of being prepared. When you are dealing with something potentially frightening, if you can get ahead of the kids, they will be in control. Their confidence comes from your attitude and approach. They will know you have a plan. It is terms which makes them feel safe. Education and empowerment are the keys to preparation and relieving fear.

With students after the drill:

It's help programs and teach us all about the proper and safe way to act in case of emergency that although safety drills can be scary, they are necessary to help us be more prepared to always remember to Stop, Lock, Listen and Assess when announcements are given. It is important that they can help everyone by practicing seriously, and encourage them to be helpers with others and helpers for others.

If a student continues to struggle with safety drills:

What they are thinking, what they think they know, and what they are afraid of occurred about the training reaction; could this be a reaction to past trauma? In an administrator for guidance, possibly involve the school social worker or parent of the adverse reaction to the drill and make a preparation plan for next time.

Emergency - use this area to take notes (medical needs, notes for substitutes, etc.)

SAFETY GUIDE

Letter from Austin Johnson, Director of Safety and Security

The safety and well-being of students, staff and community are our top priority. We recognize that students and staff learn, teach, and reach their fullest potential only when they feel safe and are mentally well.

This guide is intended to highlight our many safety initiatives and educate you on ways you can help us prioritize safety in our schools each day. Our schools are committed to continuous improvements in safety and security, regularly updating protocols and incorporating the latest best practices to protect students and staff. We will continue to work toward our mission to provide every student a diverse, quality

- Types of School Emergencies & Crisis Communication Plans
- Resources Available to Students, Staff, and Families
- How To Talk To Your Student About Safety

In a world with ever-changing challenges and dangers, it is essential that our entire community is united in supporting our students. Please help us in these efforts. If you ever see or hear of a concern that our schools should be aware of, please do not hesitate to reach out using the tools here and on our website, or email, call, or stop by and see an administrator.

Thank you for your partnership,

Austin Johnson
