The Delta School: A Learning Model for Rural Education?

"Education and rural America have always been symbiotic. In the 19th century, small towns built one-room school houses, and land grant colleges created the foundations for what are now many of the most thriving cities in the country.

Today that symbiosis is under severe threat."

This article from Grant Lichtman explores how rural schools are pivoting to address lack of service and support, especially the Delta School in Memphis, TN.
