Background Information

Having building principals deliver monthly reports during board workshops bridges the gap between administrative governance and the daily reality of the classroom.

For the school board and the public, these regular updates provide an opportunity to turn abstract data and policy decisions into concrete examples of student progress, school culture, and building-level needs.

Furthermore, presenting in a workshop setting creates a valuable touchpoint for principals and board members to connect directly. This face-to-face dialogue builds mutual trust, ensures leadership stays aligned on strategic goals, and gives board members a firsthand understanding of the unique successes and challenges within each school building.
