RationaleThe restructuring of our senior ELA courses will allow more flexibility for our students. For example, students could take Senior Composition and Senior Literature concurrently. Additionally, the courses can be taken in any order, which should increase flexibility during the scheduling process. For students who are ambitious, they could choose to take 3 or 4 terms of senior ELA by enrolling in multiple Senior Literature courses. Conversely, for students who may not pass a course the first time, they could immediately retake the course in a subsequent term. Lastly, we will also offer these courses as blended, blocks, and skinnies.

In today's complex and interconnected world, understanding the values that guide human behavior is essential. Literature and the Human Legacy invites students to think critically about ethical dilemmas, leadership, and the moral consequences of choice through the study of classical and modern literature. By examining how authors portray integrity, ambition, and virtue, students will develop empathy, critical thinking, and interpretive skills that extend beyond the classroom. This course fosters thoughtful discussion, creative expression, and ethical reasoning - preparing students for college, careers, and responsible participation in an ever-evolving global
