Understanding Panorama Student Surveys

A comprehensive board to explain what Panorama student surveys are, why we use them, and how students, families, and staff can engage with the results. Curated by an administrator in the USA.

Why Schools Use Panorama Surveys

Overview: Panorama Student Surveys

Panorama student surveys are research-backed tools designed to capture students' perspectives on their school experience. The results help educators, administrators, and families understand social-emotional learning (SEL), school climate, and other vital areas.

Purpose and Impact

The main goal is to gather student voice data to guide school improvement, inform SEL programs, and enhance student support. This leads to a more responsive and positive learning environment.

Who Participates in the Surveys?

Students from K-12 participate in these surveys, with question sets tailored to be age-appropriate. Some districts extend surveys to families and staff as well.

Why is this important?

We would like to gather feedback directly from students to better understand their experiences and needs. This helps us improve how we support them, guide school-wide initiatives, and strengthen social-emotional learning. The survey results give educators insight into students' emotional well-being and executive functioning skills—so we can better understand the reasons behind any academic or behavioral challenges and respond with the right support.

Positively Refine School Climate & Safety

Insights from the surveys allow schools to monitor trends in safety, respect, and inclusion, and to address areas of concern quickly.
