Help Your Child Combat<sup>10/2</sup> Loneliness and Feel Connected

For families quarantining and social distancing, it's important to look for opportunities allowing children to enjoy meaningful interactions with others.

For Younger Children

- Write or draw pictures to pen pals.
- Write or draw pictures for neighbors.
- Write messages for the neighborhood on the driveway in chalk.
- Hang signs and/or make cards for delivery people, including the mail carrier.
- Call or connect online with family members.
- Look through family photo albums.
- Create silly videos to send family and friends.
- Take part in the Original Flat Stanley Project.
- Does your child miss visiting the local pizza joint? Have them write a letter to the restaurant.
- Have Zoom playdates with their friends. Fun activities include playing games together they both have, crafts, and putting on puppet shows or storytime for each other.
- Working from home? Let your child be your "intern" for the day. Set up space next to your desk where they can quietly color or read.

For Older Children

- Write to people they admire: Artists, singers, authors, illustrators, gamers — the list is endless.
- Research colleges, universities and trade schools.
- Spend time on social media (with boundaries!).
- Look through their yearbooks.
- Phone, Facetime, Google Hangouts, Zoom, and Skype are all modalities for "meeting" online.
- Connect with local online groups. Many Dungeons and Dragons aficionados have moved sessions online.
- Online gaming
- Scrapbook using photos of family members or friends who they miss.
- Create a how-to tutorial for YouTube or TikTok on something they enjoy doing.
- Research if your house of worship offers online teen meetups.
- Find a cause to advocate for online. Many organizations have found ways to utilize volunteers and activists during COVID.
- Make sure teens have access to a Teen Lifeline.
- They can be found in most communities and in countries around the world.
