

SCHOOL DISTRICTS SHOULD NOT OF CONSTRUCTION

In today's economic environment, we know that school officials carefully review every expenditure to determine that the districts receive full value on their investments. It is especially important that the districts maximize the return on investments in capital projects such as new construction, renovations, and air conditioning upgrades.

If you have had a major capital project in recent years, and there are considerable defects related to the project, contact Gravely & Pearson, L.L.P. The necessary legal steps will be taken to recover monetary damages for school districts when there have been construction defects in various projects.

There is no financial commitment by the school district until there is a settlement on behalf of the school district.
