We want to take a moment to acknowledge the stolen lands on which meet today, from our various locations around the area. This land has been home since time immemorial to the Native Nations of the Multnomah, Kalapuya, Chinook, Clackamas, Molalla, Kathlamet, Tualatin peoples, among others. Native peoples hunted deer and other animals, fished for salmon and other fish, gathered traditional root and berry foods, traded, lived within traditional spiritual and governmental structures, and more--and still do. Smallpox and measles epidemics, brought to this area by settlers, missionaries, and traders, decimated up to 90% of the population in the early 19th century. Boarding schools, tribal termination, racism, and other aspects of colonialism have continued to negatively impact Native people since that time. We can't undo what was done, but we can honor and acknowledge the descendants of the original peoples of this land, those who have passed, as well as the land itself. As we gather today, we focus on building connection with and learning from our current Native students, families and community.
